

It is not in consumers best interests to enable copyright protection in digital television. Doing so will only frustrate the technically inept, and force the technically able to circumvent the copyright measures. We should not make criminals out of Americans who simply want to watch a re-run of Nash Bridges at sometime later.

Further, wasn't all of this decided in the BetaMax case in the mid 80's? Why does digital technology change things?